Part 3

It was a perfect sunny day at the festival and it felt like nothing could go wrong. My old friend, Mr. N, who is an unknown poet, realized was at London last year. He arrived there at 8 and was encouraged while working on a collection of poems. It was frosty and snow all around flickered garages. Mr. N did not believe in Santa and had no connection in London. And although everything was beautiful around, Mr. N had a longing in his soul. He was lonely, even on New Year's Eve. Half an hour before the New Year, Mr. went for a walk, he looked at couples in love and happy families, at funny children and sadly. At the end, he sat down on a bench watching the street slowly empty. Mr. N didn't believe in miracles, but Poot! A plump little man appeared in front of him in a red coat. "Happy New Year!" he said, putting a box in front of Mr. N, and disappeared as unexpectedly as he appeared. There was a bunch of chocolates in the box and Mr. N realized that it was a Santa!

Mr. N smiled and was surprised. He realized that one had to believe in miracles.

Three months later, Mr. N ^{created} realised a collection of fairy tales for children about Santa and miracles.
